Lisa,

A few responses:

1. You went to DC for activities basically unrelated to MEF's mission.
2. DC has a lot of editors, MEF staff, and MEFEF grantees; they are who you should be focused on.
3. I doubt if Posobiec is someone for us to associate with.
4. Please don't surprise me with your travels, starting with indications on the calendar.

More broadly, I am not convinced that you are focused on the tasks we agreed upon back in November, such as tending to MEFO and cultivating editors to improve our publishing record. Please show me that you are.

Dr. Pipes,

I met up with Jack Posobiec over the weekend and he asked to have Sydney Watson, a friend, on OANN. As such he invited me to the studio. I took that as an opportunity for me meet people there so that we (MEF) can build relationships with them and eventually have them book MEF staff/fellows. It has nothing to do with anything in Europe. This is why I brought it up on the project directors call.

My apologies for not clearing it with you. I was treating it as a work from home day. The OANN time is at 1pm which I was considering a lunch break. I have been working on MEF responsibilities since 8:30am and plan to work the entire day.

Lisa,

Going over the PD call today with me, Gregg mentioned you're going to DC tomorrow.

I have two concerns. You did not clear this with me. It seems to me that you're getting too caught up with the Europe topic at the expense of your internal MEF work.

Your response?

Tommy:

Lisa, what dates are you in the UK, babe? I fuckin' need help. (laugh) I need to do a proper campaign. I want an election campaign. I've been speaking with Ezra, as well. I just need people who can help. Most people I have are, are not intelligent enough. I need, um, even just taking with media, taking requests, answering them. Um, I don't know how long you're here for, don't know what your plans are. I don't know if you'd like to stay longer. I don't know if you want to stay and help and be part of my campaign team.

I don't know what you're situation with, with Middle East, foreign, whether they'd allow you a week out, two weeks out, three weeks out. I don't know! You tell me. (laugh) I'm just puttin' it out to you, babe. I'm sat here, I'm doing everything I can, I'm gonna get this bus, and I'm gonna fuckin' ... I want to absolutely smash this. [inaudible 00:00:50] to get my head straight. I wanna go out and nonstop for the next four weeks fuckin' own the Northwest of Manchester.

But that needs organization, which I don't have any of, and planning, which I don't have any of, and management, which I don't have any of. Let me know, babe.

I do think given the amount he is spending/has spent on legal fees it is necessary. Plus, if he wins it is a win for us.

Query from The Guardian

Guardian enquiry re Tommy Robinson

Thu 5/16/2019 3:11 AM

To: Daniel Pipes Gmail <daniel.pipes@gmail.com>; Gregg Roman <Roman@meforum.org>; Lisa Barbounis <Barbounis@meforum.org>

Morning all,

I'm getting in touch as we are looking to run a piece on Tommy Robinson's MEP election campaign and I am seeking clarification on the role of Lisa Barbounis, who has been present on the campaign trail for about two weeks. I would be grateful if you could help with the following:

- What is Ms Barbounis' role on Tommy Robinson's campaign?
- Has she provided any advice or other services to the campaign?
- Who funded Ms Barbounis' travel and accommodation costs for her time on the campaign?
- Has the Middle East Forum made any financial or other donation to Tommy Robinson's campaign?
- Is the Middle East Forum still funding Tommy Robinson's legal fees in his ongoing contempt of court case?

I would be grateful for a response by 10pm UK time (6pm EDT) today.

Many thanks,

Josh

Sending this to just you and Gregg.

I was on I, and requested in writing, a vacation with my family to England and Ireland. I stopped in England to see Tommy and introduce my family to him. I went to 3 of his rallies so they could see what it was like. I am home.

As you know I do occasionally volunteer my time to help him with little things such as answering emails on TR.news and the Press box for votetommyrobinson.com. I use my maiden name specifically to keep things separate.

Neither MEF nor Tommy paid me any money for my official family vacation. That includes travel and accommodation. Anything I have done for Tommy is strictly on a personal volunteer basis.

I'm forecasting that TR will face more police harassment against his legal campaign efforts as predict that to try and save her doomed premiership Theresa May will launch a last-ditch empty campaign on Islamic issues. Hence she wants TR out of that rhetorical territory.

The "present on the campaign trail for two weeks" means of course they've got someone embedded.

Very wise to have a piece of paper from the MEF confirming you were on vacation. It's the classic Marxist "false consciousness" fantasy that they will not let go of.

The working class can't possibly be smart enough to make up their own minds, there have to be dark forces funding and steering it all.

The name rings a bell though. "Josh Halliday." This was a lifetime ago for me. But ask Tommy about him is my gut instinct. I suspect this Guardian scumbag has a history._

What I'm getting at is that you needn't chide yourself for letting yourself appear on camera by accident.

The "two weeks" bit in their email gives the game away, that they've got intel, probably from whoever HOPE not Hate put into Tommy's campaign.

So, you could have stayed in your hotel room nailed to a laptop and not gone outside, and the Guardian still would have sent this sort of enquiry.

I wouldn't be worried. Though he would likely throw his own mother under a bus to preserve his 501(c)(3) you followed the right protocols and that's all that matters.

In my little contact with him he combines an academic brain with being reasonably worldly wise, so will likely shrug off this bullshit from The Guardian as exactly what was to be expected anyway.

'Punches, attacks, milkshakes': inside the Tommy Robinson campaign

As the far-right activist fights to become an MEP, the Guardian learns new details of his modus operandi and support network

Josh Halliday and Simon Murphy

Fri 17 May 2019 11.43 EDT

A Drone hovers high above the crowd on a Wigan housing estate. About 300 men, women and children are gathered before a mobile billboard on a sun-drenched spring evening. A cheer erupts when the main speaker arrives.

Waving a St George's flag, Tommy Robinson wants the crowd to send a deafening message to "treacherous politicians" and vote him into the European parliament on 23 May. "I am one of you," he shouts across the estate. "They don't breathe the same air as us. They do not care about us. But I can guarantee you: I am one of you."

The far-right anti-Islam activist, whose real name is Stephen Yaxley-Lennon, has delivered the same speech countless times on a chaotic and ugly campaign across the north-west of England. On the Norley Hall estate, one of Wigan's most deprived neighbourhoods, Robinson addressed one of his biggest crowds of the tour.

"Right now, can anyone say our country is going in the right direction?" he asks. "No, it's turning into fucking Tehran!" shouts back an activist handing out flyers and membership forms for the far-right party For Britain. Although Robinson is officially an independent candidate, and an adviser to the Ukip leader, Gerard Batten, For Britain has pledged its support to his campaign.

There has been a more surprising presence at Robinson's rallies, however: Lisa Barbounis, a senior executive of the conservative US thinktank the Middle East Forum, has been a central figure on Robinson's campaign team and present at many of his rallies, the Guardian has learned. Her exact role is unclear but Barbounis, who says she has worked on several Republican campaigns including John McCain's run for president in 2008, has been on the trail with Robinson for about a fortnight. The Philadelphia-based group, which is well funded by a number of US rightwing donors, says its goal is to defend "anti-Islamist authors" and last year spent tens of thousands of pounds on Robinson's demonstrations and legal fees when he was jailed for contempt of court.

The Middle East Forum said it continued to pay Robinson's legal fees but had not contributed to his campaign, which would be in breach of electoral law. It said Barbounis was "on vacation in the UK" and spending her "personal time and personal expense" on the campaign.

There has been outside help, too, from Robinson's former employer, the rightwing Canadian website Rebel Media, which said this week that it had paid for the Israeli-Australian commentator Avi Yemini to fly from Melbourne to cover his campaign. Yemini, who was recently denied entry to the US, has described Islam as a "barbaric ideology" that has taken over England and called Muslim countries "Islamic shitholes". Yemini is little known in the UK but has been ever-present at Robinson's rallies, often as a warm-up act on stage or in videos taking aim at critics of the would-be MEP. His recent videos promoting Robinson include "PROOF: Tommy Robinson PROTESTORS are just PAID thugs" and "CONFIRMED: Tommy Robinson 'protestors' are cowards".

Robinson's international supporters stand in stark contrast to the deprived estates of Manchester, Stockport, Bolton, Cumbria and Wigan where he has focused his campaign, drawing crowds of between 50 and 300. Political rivals are split on whether he has a genuine chance.

If turnout is low, he may need just 8% of the vote to be the first MEP in Britain elected as an independent – a possibility keenly apparent to the main political parties, which recall the election of the BNP's Nick Griffin in the north-west with just 8% of the vote in 2009.

"He will do very badly – he's not got a chance of being elected," said one MEP privately. Another believed he could win if Brexit-weary voters decided to stay at home: "One of the biggest worries is apathy – people saying they're not going to vote." Those fears – that a low turnout could help anti-European insurgents – are echoed across the continent amid forecasts of historic gains by populist parties such as Nigel Farage’s Brexit party.

The election of Tommy Robinson MEP would cap a once-unthinkable rise for the convicted football thug, who started leading nationalist street protests in his hometown of Luton a decade ago. He became a global cause célèbre for the far right last year when he was imprisoned for three months over a broadcast that allegedly risked prejudicing a child sexual exploitation trial in Leeds – a conviction that was eventually overturned but will be retried at the Old Bailey in July. While Robinson regularly complains of being smeared as a racist and a Nazi, he has been filmed saying things like: “Somalis are backward barbarians”; British Muslims are “enemy combatants who want to kill you, maim you and destroy you”; and refugees are “raping their way through the country”.

In remarks unearthed by the Guardian, Robinson told a meeting of far-right activists in Cork in 2016 that the west was “too weak to say our culture is superior to Muslim culture” and – in comments picked up off-camera – told one rightwing campaigner it was fine to use violence against counter-protesters as long as it was not on camera. “If the cameras aren’t there, fucking punch the geezers right in the head,” he said, adding that being seen to be aggressive “just turns people off”. “You want to be seen as the victims – people viewing you like: ‘Fucking hell, look how they’re getting treated. Give them a chance’ – you know what I mean?” The unguarded remarks were made during filming for an RTE documentary, I Am Immigrant, which has never aired in Britain.

Robinson’s chequered history with the law does not prevent him standing for the European parliament. The 37-year-old father of three has at least five convictions for violence and public order offences from 2005 to 2014, and has served prison sentences for using a false passport and a £160,000 mortgage fraud.

On his campaign trail, Robinson has been surrounded almost permanently by a security team and his own film crew. He is keenly aware he will be scrutinised whenever he is on camera – but the mask occasionally slips.

The footage of Robinson being doused with milkshake in Warrington became a viral sensation. In the aftermath, he could be seen throwing a volley of punches at the assailant, who Robinson’s team pounced on. The incident sparked chaotic scenes, currently being investigated by Cheshire police, when two anti-racism protesters were punched to the ground leaving them needing hospital treatment. Alice Edwards, one of the victims, said she was punched in the face by Danny Thomas, Robinson’s campaign organiser, and suffered a broken nose. Thomas has not denied the incident but claimed Edwards was “attacking our team”, which she disputes.

The Guardian has learned that the man who filmed the milkshake incident has been receiving police protection after a far-right activist threatened to pass his and his parents’ contact details and address to “the most far-right groups online”. Police placed an urgent response marker on the homes of David, who was afraid to give his surname, and his father following threats made online by a former BNP parliamentary candidate. The 31-year-old bar worker, from Wigan, said: “I’ve been told by police to keep my door locked and get a basket for my letterbox in case someone tried to put anything fire-related through it. It’s quite intimidating.”

Robinson was quick to use the milkshake incident to rile his supporters. In a video later that day to his 40,000 followers on the encrypted app Telegram, where he was forced to turn after being banned by the major social networks, Robinson claimed he was “politically targeted ... and the police have done fuck all”, urging viewers to “get angered with what they’re watching”. He added at the end of the clip: “Ah mate, I so wanna win this. No amount of punches, milkshakes, attacks or anything’s gonna stop me. I’m coming to every city ...”

After posting the video, he wrote on Telegram: “Shake it up baby! Comments here.” His followers responded with more than 700 comments, including many that attacked Muslims including referring to the milkshake-thrower as a “paki”. One user wrote: “Muslims need eradicating from UK probably sounds a bit harsh but they have raped this country and its citizens for the last 30 years disgusting uk gov corrupt paedophiles.”

Another commenter called Muslims “cowards” and “inbreds”. A supporter also said they were “sick of these Islamic appeasing left extremist groups” which he said were “all funded by Soros”, referencing the Jewish financier George Soros, who is often the target of antisemitism. Another follower said the man who threw the drink represented “spot on the attitude of the typical Muslim teenager throughout the UK, absolutely zero respect”.

In response to a series of questions from the Guardian, Robinson said: “You are fake news.”

While he does not acknowledge responsibility for his supporters’ behaviour, on the campaign trail he has sometimes revelled in their shared agenda. “I am one of you,” he told supporters on the Norley Hall estate. “I’ve made mistakes like all of you. I’ll make more ... [but] I can guarantee you one thing: we are building a movement.”
